Read collection overview Collection overview

Gloria Xifaras Clark was working as an elementary school teacher in her home town of New Bedford in 1964 when she answered the call to enlist in the Mississippi Freedom Summer Project. A recent graduate of Wheelock College, she was assigned to teach in the Benton County Freedom School in Holly Springs for several months, and stayed on to help organize the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party and to teach literacy and Negro history in Benton, Tippah, and Union Counties. She continued on the activist path after returning to Massachusetts, devoting her energies to economic justice initiatives and work with the Friends of SNCC and the NAACP, and diving headlong into the antiwar movement as head of the Greater New Bedford Draft Information Center. After spending three years in England with her family in 1972-1975, she resumed her civic and educational work in New Bedford, eventually earning appointment as head of the Commonwealth's Office for Children under Michael Dukakis in 1983. With a keen awareness of the historical importance of the civil rights struggle, Clark became a key organizer of an oral history project during the 1990s that included her fellow veterans of the civil rights movement in northern Mississippi. The results are available digitally through the University of Southern Mississippi.

Documenting the evolution of one activist's career, the Clark Papers offer valuable information on the Freedom Summer and Freedom Schools in northern Mississippi, particularly in Tippah and Benton Counties, and civil rights activism more generally. The collection includes communiques among civil rights workers in the region, a variety of correspondence, pamphlets, newsletters, and ephemera, plus a small, but noteworthy collection of photographs. Of particular significance among the later materials is a thick body of material from the Draft Information Center in New Bedford (1967-1968), the Vietnam Summer project (1967), and relating to Clark's role in the Harvard Strike of 1969.

Background on Gloria Xifaras Clark

From the Mississippi Freedom Summer in 1964 to the antiwar movement and her work in community development in New Bedford, Gloria Clark has lived her activist principles. Born Gloria Maravell in Fitchburg, Mass., the granddaughter of Greek immigrants, Clark was raised with three constants in life: education, music, and a passion for social justice.

Shortly after graduating from high school in 1959 and entering Wheelock College, Maravell's family relocated to New Bedford, where she has made her home ever since. Although she entered college at a time when the civil rights movement was capturing the imaginations of northern students, little in her college life marked her as a future radical. An education major who flirted briefly with a career as a singer, she married an attorney from New Bedford, John Xifaras, during her senior year in 1963. That fall, she began teaching in an elementary school in Dartmouth, Mass. Yet despite having just begun a new life and new career, Clark stepped out of her familiar surroundings into the struggle for civil rights in the deep South.

Like many young northerners, Clark was attracted to the movement through Mississippi Freedom Summer, a project organized by the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO), which included both the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE). As a key component of what was essentially a massive voter registration drive in Mississippi, activists envisioned a network of schools around the state that would both educate and activate. Eventually numbering more than forty, these "Freedom Schools" supplemented traditional elementary and high school curricula with units in African American history, a radical exploration of the socioeconomic and political context of race relations in America, and a call for political engagement.

Clark trained for Freedom Summer in Memphis, Tenn., and was assigned to work in Holly Springs during the summer 1964.

While teaching in the Benton County Freedom Schools, she became an organizer for the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, expanding her scope from Benton to Tippah and Union Counties, and she traveled to the Democratic National Convention that fall in Atlantic City, N.J., to support the Party. Despite witnessing the violence of the backlash against the movement, including the burning of a Tippah County church whose pastor allowed it to host a speech by Fannie Lou Hamer, Clark remained in Mississippi until January 1965, teaching literacy and African American history, working for SNCC, and organizing the Freedom House Library.

When she finally returned home to Massachusetts, Clark's commitment to the movement stayed true to course. In addition to working for the Friends of SNCC in Cambridge and Boston, she led the newly-formed youth chapter of the NAACP in New Bedford from 1965-1968 and was active in the city in civil rights and voter registration work. As opposition to the War in Vietnam took on an increasing urgency in 1967 and 1968, she immersed herself in the antiwar movement, helping to organize the Vietnam Summer and becoming a leader in the Greater New Bedford Committee to End the War in Vietnam and the Greater New Bedford Draft Information Center. Her return to school to pursue a master's degree in education at Harvard barely impeded her: at Harvard, she took part in the iconic strike of 1969, when students organized by the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) occupied University Hall, eliciting a furious response from the university president, who demanded their expulsion and arrest, and an even more furious response from the police.

In 1972, Clark moved to England with her new (second) husband Edward Clark and her two young children. In some ways, her three years abroad marked a turning point, though hardly a lessening of her social commitments. Returning home after working as a research assistant in Oxford and an adult education teacher in London, she turned her energies toward community development, working through -- and for -- the city and state governments. Her career included a stint under Governor Michael Dukakis as the Commissioner of the Office for Children in Massachusetts (1983-1986); service as Assistant for Human Services to the Mayor of New Bedford and Director of the Drug Free Community Partnership (1987-1992); and a lengthy term as Executive Director of the Advocacy Resource Center of Greater New Bedford (1992-2005), advocating for the needs of persons with developmental disabilities. As a consultant since, Clark has provided a wide range of services for non-profit organizations, including support in fundraising, grant writing, community needs assessment, and organizational and managerial policy.

As the thirtieth anniversary of Mississippi Freedom Summer wound down in 1995, Clark and several fellow veterans of the civil rights movement organized a large-scale project that resulted in over 50 oral history interviews documenting the movement in northern Mississippi.

Scope of collection

The papers of Gloria Xifaras Clark are an exceptional legacy from a life of civil rights and antiwar activism. Documenting the evolution of one activist's career, the Clark Papers offer valuable information on the Freedom Summer and Freedom Schools in northern Mississippi, particularly in Tippah and Benton Counties, and civil rights activism more generally. The collection includes communiques among civil rights workers in the region, a variety of correspondence, pamphlets, newsletters, and ephemera, plus a small, but noteworthy collection of photographs. Of particular significance among the later materials is a thick body of material from the Draft Information Center in New Bedford (1967-1968), the Vietnam Summer project (1967), and relating to Clark's role in the Harvard Strike of 1969.

Series descriptions

Series 1. Mississippi

1964-2015 4 boxes

While serving as coordinator of the Benton County Freedom School in Holly Springs, Miss., during the Mississippi Freedom Summer, 1964-1965, Clark accumulated a wealth of correspondence, communiques, and other materials documenting the civil rights work in which she and her colleagues in the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, the Congress of Racial Equality, and the Council of Federated Organizations were engaged. Of particular note are materials connected with her work in the Freedom School, including lesson plans and curricula; materials relating to the organization of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, and a number of reports from other colleagues and schools operating in northern Mississippi. After leaving the south early in 1965, Clark also maintained a substantial correspondence with colleagues and friends in the movement, northern and southern, and since the 1990s, she has been involved in several reunions.

The series also includes letters and ephemera relating from Clark's friend and Civil Rights colleague, Marjorie Merrill, including newsletters from Freedom Summer, a flier for a talk at Antioch Church by Fannie Lou Hamer, and newspaper clippings and other material relating to Antioch Church after it was burned to the ground to prevent Hamer's talk.

To supplement the series, we include links to digitized oral histories conducted by Clark between 1995 and 2003 with fellow veterans of the civil rights movement. The original recordings are held in the Oral History Archives at the University of Southern Mississippi.

Series 2. Post-Mississippi activism

1965-1983 6 boxes

The materials in Series 2 document Clark's work in community organizing, education, and particularly, her work in opposition to the War in Vietnam. The series reflects Clark's activity in Cambridge and New Bedford, and includes exceptional content documenting Vietnam Summer, the Greater New Bedford Draft Information Center, the Greater New Bedford Committee to End the War in Vietnam, and similar organizations. As a graduate student in education at Harvard, Clark was also an ardent participant in the Harvard Strike of 1969, and the series includes important, though less thorough documentation of her activity in the feminist movement, with the Job Corps in New Bedford (1965-1966), and some of her political work in the 1960s.

Documentation of Clark's career after her return from England in 1975 is comparatively sparse, however there are some records of her work with the Office for Children and her consultancies for community organizations in New Bedford.

Series 3. Personal

1958-1983 6 boxes

Series 3 consists primarily of correspondence between Clark and several friends from high school and college, along with miscellaneous records of her education at Wheelock College and Harvard.

Series 4. Photographs

1954-2000 1 box

During her time in Mississippi, Clark took a number of photographs of the Benton County Freedom School in Holly Springs, her students, and fellow civil rights workers, as well as an important series of images of the attempts to get delegates of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party seated at the Democratic National Convention in 1964. Also included are images of Clark from high school and College through her work with the Massachusetts Office for Children.

The series also includes 34 images from Clark's colleague and friend, Marjorie Merrill, during Mississippi Freedom Summer.

Series 5. Printed material

1962 3 boxes

Series 5 contains a small assortment of published works kept by Clark relating to the civil rights movement, antiwar activism, and other areas of interest.

| • Allen, Pamela Chude. Oral history with Gloria Clark | 2001 Oct. 17 | 00:39:09 |
- Interview conducted October 17, 2001 with Chude Pamela Allen in San Francisco, California. Chude Pamela Allen was born into an Episcopal family in eastern Pennsylvania. Though her parents were Republicans, their Christian ideology contributed to Allen's liberal foundation, as did exposure to children from more progressive families in school. Allen went to Spellman College, where she became politically active in her freshman year, and was recruited to volunteer for Freedom Summer by SNCC. She trained in Oxford, OH before being sent to Holly Springs, MS in 1964, where Allen became a teacher at the Freedom school in Holly Springs. During the summer, Allen encountered both racial violence and sexism. After Freedom Summer, Allen continued her political activism as part of the secular Left. She became active in the women's liberation movement in the mid-1960s and moved to San Francisco, CA in 1968 where she would organize women's liberation groups. Allen worked for The Guardian and continued her activism throughout the 1970s. Despite a decline in her political activity in the early 80s, Allen began writing about her experiences as a volunteer during Civil Rights Movement. She helped organize the 25th anniversary reunion for Freedom Summer in 1989, as well as the 30th anniversary reunion in 1994. Allen has since then worked to help volunteers of the Movement cope with any trauma they may have endured.

- Caldwell, David. Oral history with Gloria Clark 2003 Jan. 16 00:47:23

David Caldwell was born in Lavaca, Arkansas where he stayed and worked on his uncle's farm, and attended segregated schools. He dropped out of school and worked in a number of jobs, including for a furrier. Caldwell joined the military and served in Japan during and after World War II. He also served in Korea and Germany. After being discharged from the Army, he came to Holly Springs, Mississippi, where he first experienced racist intimidation. He became involved with the civil rights workers in Holly Springs during the summer of 1964.

- Carver, Ron. Oral history with Gloria Clark 2001 Apr. 26 00:47:48

Ron Carver was born in 1946 in Boston and was in high school when he became aware of the struggle for civil rights going on in Mississippi. After graduation, he decided to get involved and he volunteered as an assistant to Julian Bond in the SNCC (Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee) office in Atlanta, Georgia. At the end of the summer, he decided to go to Mississippi. Carver canvassed from door to door in black communities, working primarily in North Mississippi, assisting black citizens in registering to vote, organizing mass meetings, identifying issues deemed important by local people, recruiting for the Freedom Democratic Party, taking part in Freedom Days, and other civil rights activities. Carver left Mississippi to matriculate as a freshman at Columbia University.

Born in Jasper County, Mississippi, Reverend James was a graduate of Rust College and pastored churches in Grenada, Ripley, Columbus, and Greenwood. As pastor of St. Paul's Church in Ripley, James was a leader in the integration of the local hospital, schools, and restaurants. He also facilitated NAACP and civil rights movement meetings in Ripley, and he was also present at the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party meeting at Antioch Baptist Church in Blue Mountain the night before it was burned.

• Jeffries, Howard. Oral history with Gloria Clark 2000 Oct. 29 00:47:31

Interview conducted on October 29, 2000. Howard Jeffries was born in Holly Springs, Mississippi on January 16, 1943. Jeffries was active with the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. Initially, attending nightly meetings at the Freedom House in Holly Springs, Mr. Jeffries eventually participated in voter registration and school integration drives and other civil rights events including the March on Washington, the James Meredith March, and events that occurred during the Selma to Montgomery marches. While he was unharmed during the marches, Mr. Jeffries experienced an aggressive confrontation with a police officer in Senatobia, Mississippi. Other experiences with SNCC include work at field offices in Mississippi, and Alabama, and the print shop in Atlanta, Georgia. After SNCC disbanded, Jeffries relocated to Memphis, Tennessee.

• Kendall, David. Oral history with Gloria Clark 2002 Feb. 11 00:47:37

David E. Kendall was born in 1944 in Camp Atterbury, Indiana. He was influenced by his Quaker upbringing and a desire for adventure to get involved in the civil rights movement. Kendall was trained by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) in Oxford, Ohio to participate in Freedom Summer. His roommate, Andrew Goodman, was killed while working in Mississippi. Before leaving for Mississippi, Kendall lobbied Congress in Washington, D.C. to provide more federal marshals to protect the civil rights advocates. Originally assigned to McComb, Mississippi, Kendall ultimately ended up in Holly Springs, Mississippi to register voters. Kendall supported and organized groups of African Americans to register to vote on Freedom Days. He worked primarily with Ivanhoe Donaldson and Cleveland Sellers. Kendall attended the Atlantic City Convention as a member of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party delegation in 1964. He then returned to Indiana, earned a law degree, and argued civil rights cases. He developed a relationship with President Bill and Hillary Clinton and later served as their attorney during the Whitewater case.
